Spring semester 2021

Planning & Managing Your Time

Weekly Schedule & 'To Do' list:

Create a schedule. In it, allocate weekly study hours for each of your modules. Consider making a corresponding 'To Do' list for each module. Follow it by ticking tasks off as you complete them.

Assessment Plan

Early in the semester, take note of all assessment dates, deadlines, and percentages of the overall module grade that each are worth. Prioritise which assessments need the most work and time. Knowing exactly what work you need to have done at different stages throughout the semester will ensure you are well prepared for final deadlines.

Prepare Assignments

Individual

If it is an individual assignment, set yourself goals to cover sections by a particular week so that you don't end up with a big workload at the end of the semester.

Group

Within your group, decide early on who will do what work and stick to that as best as possible.

3 Notetaking

Notetaking is the stepping stone to understanding, it is making your own of the knowledge flowing past you.

A systematic notetaking method helps you to reinforce your learning and to reuse your notes in essays and assessments.

The Cornell Method works

4 Continuous Assessment

Continuous assessment will be the default approach for Spring 2021, but for some modules (see box 5) there will be end-of-semester timed exams.
Your module leaders will outline the module assessments at the beginning of the semester in the course outline.

5 Online End-of-Semester Exams

Some accounting, tax and finance modules are required to run timed end-of-semester online exams in weeks 14 and 15 in order to qualify for exemptions from the main accountancy and tax accrediting bodies.
See your module course outline.
